

BRADLEY K. HAYNES

B. K. (Brad) Haynes is a writer and the founder of B. K. Haynes Corporation, a real estate development and construction company, organized in 1969.

He has been active in rural land development since 1965, and he has written and lectured extensively on the subject, including the course, How You Can Grow Rich Through Rural Land -Starting From Scratch.

He has also written consumer booklets, newspaper columns, newsletters, magazine articles, and a novel about the real estate industry.

B. K., an Accredited Land Consultant (ALC), is past president of the Virginia Chapter of The Realtors Land Institute, and a past Regional Vice President of the national Realtors Land Institute, an affiliate of the National Association of Realtors. His specialty is in turning troubled raw land properties around. He has developed and brokered over 200 subdivisions in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania.

B. K. graduated from George Washington University with a degree in Business Administration. He also did graduate work in Communications at American University.

He now owns a 250 acre cattle farm near Middletown, Virginia, in the Washington, DC metropolitan area, office buildings in Front Royal, Virginia, and scattered rental and waterfront properties. He lives on Greatland Farm with his son, Brett and daughter-in-law, Sonya. B. K. keeps two airplanes on the farm.
